RED TEAMING – PUT YOUR PHYSICAL SECURITY TO THE TEST

WHAT IS RED TEAMING?

Red Teaming is a ‘penetration test’ for an organisation’s building. It’s a real-life exercise that tests your organisations physical security measures, policies and procedures against real-world specific threats.

Red Teaming uses real-life exercises and is able to provide genuine evidence of weaknesses in your organisation’s physical security posture. This could include (but is not limited to);

- Testing how staff adhere to the policies and procedures implemented by your organisation
- What information can be gathered via social engineering
- How effective your physical security controls work in practice

Red Team testing was born out of a requirement to evaluate and test physical and procedural security measures with realistic, Threat Analysis based scenarios. The original development of the methodology was specific to businesses which employed armed guarding as part of the security profile; high risk to any live testing program but is now an option for organisations of a wide range of industries and all sizes.

WHY RED TEAMING?

Red teaming will give you valuable knowledge and understanding of your organisation’s security measures and if necessary, highlight any gaps or vulnerabilities. This means you can improve your organisation’s security in order to protect physical assets, sensitive information, your staff etc. Understanding your security controls enables you to make improved decisions regarding security and ensure that your security budget is spent in the most effective manner.
