What is Red Teaming?

Red Teaming is subjecting an organisation's site or building to penetration tests. It's a real-life exercise that tests your organisations physical security measures, policies and procedures against identified risks or vulnerabilities.

Red Teaming uses real-life exercises and is able to provide genuine evidence of weaknesses in your organisation's security posture. This could include (but is not limited to):

- Personnel Security – How staff adhere to your organisation's policies and procedures.
- Information Security – What information can be gathered via social engineering.
- Physical Security – How effective are your security measures.

Red Team testing was born out of a requirement to evaluate and test physical and procedural security measures with realistic, Threat Analysis based scenarios. The original development of the methodology was specific to businesses which employed armed guarding as part of the security profile; high risk to any live testing program but is now an option for organisations of a wide range of industries and all sizes.

Why Red Teaming?

Red teaming will give you valuable knowledge and understanding of your organisation's security measures and if necessary, highlight any gaps or vulnerabilities. This informs your Risk Management process, providing opportunities to improve your organisation's security solutions to protect physical assets, sensitive information, your staff etc. This also enables you to make informed decisions to ensure that your security budget is spent in the most effective manner.
